REMINDER

Pet obesity is a serious problem for many pets. A few pounds on your pet may lead to serious health issues, including diabetes, joint and bone problems, high blood pressure, heart disease, digestive issues, skin and coat issues, increased cancer risk, decreased stamina and difficulty breathing, higher risk during surgery and more. His health and quality of life will suffer, and any responsible owner would not wish that for a pet. If your pet is overweight, serve just a little less food, cut down or eliminate treats or buy weight management food until his weight gets closer to a healthy weight. He doesn't feed himself, so he is counting on you to help him.
